Focus on... LAW ENFORCEMENT

change is a constant in a law enforcement career, and the ability to adapt to the nature of the business makes it crucial for law enforcement professionals to have excellent communication skills. "You’re the referee in many circumstances, and there’s no room for immunity or inappropriate actions," he said. "People will look to you to provide decisive leadership."

There are 56,880 students in the college’s program well on their way to becoming law enforcement professionals, many of whom are getting real-life training. "We try to place our students in internships where they gain firsthand experience with the kind of responsibilities they may have after graduation," Livingston said. "Students who complete the program well before they enter the work force, like his, are what differentiates the Trident Technical College Emergency Management and Protection program well on their way to becoming law enforcement professionals, many of whom are getting real-life training. Livingston advised students interested in these careers to plan a path to success with Trident Technical College’s Criminal Justice program. Trident’s Criminal Justice program offers courses in Criminal Justice and Homeland Security Management, and four certificates: Law Enforcement, Corrections, Crime Scene Investigation, and Emergency Management and Protection. Livingston has been in law enforcement for 18-plus years, and he believes professionals need to be knowledgeable about the training field before becoming a full-time instructor at Trident Technical College. He told Livingston said.
